CANEGROWERS protects grower viability, profitability and the Australian cane industry's international reputation.

CANEGROWERS membership is made up of large and small, corporate and family owned, irrigated and dryland growers. It has a long, proud history. The founding organisations on which it was based date back to the early 1900s.

Importantly, CANEGROWERS is a not-for-profit public company with the sole purpose of representing the interests of its members.

Income is derived from membership fees and member services, which includes collective bargaining, training and commercial activities. Membership is voluntary and conditional upon applicants meeting eligibility criteria, as determined by the Board. The annual fee, based on a single organisational structure, is set at a rate per tonne on cane supplied to a mill or mills by a single ownership entity. The fee schedule is published annually in May and each member is advised by mail.

Membership policy has developed around a number of principles:

- Membership is voluntary.
- Membership is conditional on the applicant meeting eligibility criteria as determined by the Board.
- Membership relates to financial contributions being made in each season on all cane supplied by the members farm or farms irrespective of mill area.
- The membership fee is currently struck at a rate per tonne of cane supplied to the relevant mill and is for the aggregate of the state and local company/ies.

Our team and our offices

The CANEGROWERS Queensland organisation comprises the state company and 13 regional companies. CANEGROWERS members are represented by 87 directors and almost 100 professional and dedicated staff providing quality representation and services to members. Our industry

Sugarcane is one of Australia's largest and most important rural export industries, worth up to $2.5 billion each year from a production capacity of more than five million tonnes of sugar. Around 80% of Australia's raw sugar production is destined for the international market.

In 2015, Australia surpassed Thailand to become the world's second largest raw sugar exporter after Brazil. 96% of Australia's export sales are to Asian customers, the largest of which are Indonesia, South Korea, Malaysia and Japan. The remaining 20% of Australia's sugar production is sold on the domestic market.

Sugarcane grows in high rainfall and irrigated areas on coastal plains and river catchments along a 2,100 stretch of the Australian east coast. The industry underpins the prosperity and economic stability of communities from Mossman in far north Queensland to Grafton in northern New South Wales.

In 2016, 371,536 hectares of sugarcane was harvested. Cane farming businesses range in size from 40 to 250 hectares (ha) with the vast majority of them being family-owned. An average sized 110 ha property harvests approximately 94 ha of sugarcane each year.

The sugarcane harvest begins in May and ends in mid-December. Once harvested, cane is collected in haul-outs and transferred for road or rail transport to mills.

The sugarcane industry maintains a network of nearly 4,000 km of narrow-gauge rail lines.

To minimise sugarcane deterioration and juice evaporation, sugarcane must be transported to a sugar mill within 16 hours of harvest.

In the 2016 season more than 36.5 million tonnes of sugarcane were supplied to Australia's 24 sugarcane mills. The mills crush an average of 10,000 tonnes of sugarcane per day, and employ approximately 150 people during the season. Together, millers, growers and harvesters determine harvesting and transportation schedules that ensure that the cane is crushed as soon after harvesting as possible.

Australian sugarcane is primarily milled into raw sugar that is sold directly to refineries, rather than through trade houses. Australian sugar is internationally recognised for its high quality; and the industry is renowned for its supply reliability and superior service. Such success has been achieved through the use of best management practice in production, handling and marketing.

Australia's capacity to store more than two million tonnes of sugar in a network of bulk terminals is particularly valuable, as it allows for year-long customer supply.

With the Asian market experiencing strong growth in sugar demand as a result of an increasing population and per capita income, Australia is ideally located to fill growing demand for quality sugar.

Our big issues

CANEGROWERS, with its team of agricultural policy professionals, is involved in policy development and lobbying towards outcomes which support a profitable and sustainable sugarcane industry for all members.

Marketing

Queensland's sugarcane growers, represented by a united front of organisations led by CANEGROWERS, won a major victory for competition and fairness in 2015 when the state's parliament confirmed their legitimate right to continue to have a say in how their sugar is marketed.

Grower involvement in the crucial sugar pricing component of their income came under threat when the three biggest milling companies gave notice in 2014 that they intended to each take over the marketing of all of the sugar produced at their facilities from the 2017 season.

Up until that point, mills could market their share of the sugar and grower's sugar was marketed through an industry-owned and not for profit entity, Queensland Sugar Limited (QSL).

Amendments were made to the Sugar Industry Act (1999) to:

- enable growers to choose who markets grower economic interest (GEI) sugar,
- link the cane price to the price of sugar,
- provide for a pre-contractual dispute resolution process, and
- ensure growers cannot be discriminated against based on their GEI sugar marketer.

In 2016 and 2017 new Cane Supply Agreements were negotiated, where required, to implement the provisions of the amended legislation with CANEGROWERS working closely with bargaining collectives in relevant milling districts to provide advice, practical support and guidance.

The process was a long and protracted one in some districts and, in line with a 2015 recommendation of the Rural and Regional Affairs Committee, a Sugar Industry Code of Conduct was developed and implemented in April 2017. The Code requires negotiations to be conducted in good faith with each party acting reasonably, fairly and honestly without intimidation. As such, it prevents millers from abusing their regional monopoly power in supply contract negotiations with growers and their collectives. The Code provides a mechanism for arbitration should there be a deadlock.

Environment

The Queensland sugarcane industry farms adjacent to the World Heritage Listed Great Barrier Reef (GBR) and this dominates the issues for environment. Due to the proximity to the GBR, the industry faces significant environmental and sustainability scrutiny and now operates within a complex policy and regulatory setting that involves both the Australian and Queensland Governments.

The latest Reef Plan Report Card showed the sugarcane industry has reduced nitrogen, pesticide and sediment run off – benefitting water quality for the Great Barrier Reef. This has been achieved through grower-government partnerships which CANEGROWERS has actively supported and promoted.

Reef Rescue (2008-2013) saw $73 million of water quality grants spent in the sugarcane industry including projects on farms totalling 295,000 hectares. Growers contributed approximately $71 million to the projects which underpinned an estimated 16% reduction in dissolved inorganic nitrogen going out to the Reef.

Reef Rescue II/Reef Programme (2013-2018) has spent $7 million on water quality projects on cane farms in its first three years. Growers have co-invested $11.6 million in the projects involving 137,000 hectares of farm land.

Reef Trust (2014-2019) has committed $140 million to address highest priority threats to the GBR. CANEGROWERS has worked with the Australian Government on Reef Trust phase 1, phase 2 and phase 3, with phase 3 resulting in a $25 million project for cane to improve water quality across the catchments.

Under Reef Trust phase 3, CANEGROWERS worked with the Queensland Farmers' Federation through the Reef Alliance (a consortium of industry organisations including QFF, cane, grazing, dairy, horticulture, bananas and NRM organisations) to prepare a successful joint bid for $45.6 million of funding. The sugarcane industry component is $15.5 million to deliver improved management practices across the Wet Tropics, Burdekin, and Southern regions. The whole program will support 1,196 farmers and graziers improve their practices over 1,841,480ha across 33 Great Barrier Reef catchments by June 30, 2019.

Reef Trust phase 4 allocated $15 million for reducing nitrogen use in sugarcane production using the reverse tender mechanism targeting nitrogen use efficiency and water use efficiency in the Burdekin and Wet Tropics. A further $5 million was allocated to an Enhanced Efficiency Fertiliser project supported by Queensland Government and the Australian Fertiliser Industry. CANEGROWERS, with Sugar Research Australia, tendered and was awarded the project called EEF 60.

Along with Reef water quality issues, CANEGROWERS works on vegetation management, climate variability, spray drift reduction, chemical management and review, soil health, nitrogen use efficiency issues, supports annual collection and recycling programs for chemical containers and fertiliser bags and participates in a range of state and federal, government and industry forums around biosecurity.

Smartcane BMP

The best management practice system for sugarcane growing, Smartcane BMP, drives productivity, profitability and environmental stewardship.

Supported by the Queensland Government, program facilitators are located within each cane growing district and provide workshop and individual support to growers working through the modules. Training days and field trips are also being provided in all areas.

As at mid-2016 more than 66% of the sugarcane area in Queensland was registered with the program, showing the commitment of growers to its aims. In the Wet Tropics region, involvement is more than 80%.

Smartcane BMP is being aligned with the internationally recognised Bonsucro program and will be the primary tool to differentiate Australian sugar in a world market increasingly seeking assurances of environmental sustainability.

The Queensland Department of Environment and Heritage Protection recognises the good performance of cane farmers who have already adopted and are using best practice through Smartcane BMP and those growers who have gained accreditation in the three core modules are not being contacted as part of its water quality compliance program.

SMARTCANE
BEST PRACTICE ACCREDITED

Electricity

Electricity costs for farmers using irrigation have risen 130% in the nine years since the electricity pricing system was changed. This is an unacceptable burden on a sector of the economy which has not expanded over that time and has in fact become more efficient, through new technology, in its electricity use.

CANEGROWERS has devoted significant resources, including the engagement of independent consultants, to its campaign to expose the problems within the current electricity market and pricing mechanisms. CANEGROWERS has proposed solutions which would enable a reduction of power prices for irrigators without impacting the money energy providers make and pass on to government.

During 2016, CANEGROWERS successfully negotiated and developed with Ergon and Queensland Government a series of farm electricity pricing trials under a $10 million Regional Business Support Package. Designed to collect irrigation use data, control load and time-of-use tariffs will be trialled.

Trade

Australian sugarcane growers are the only ones in the world producing a crop without subsidies or price supports. As 80% of our raw sugar destined for consumers in other countries, CANEGROWERS actively works for increased access to international markets and an end to trade distortions and technical barriers.

CANEGROWERS works closely with Qld Sugar Limited and the Australian Sugar Milling Council through the Australian Sugar Industry Alliance and manages the industry's vital trade policy and market access function. That includes participation in trade delegations and takes the voice of Australian farmers into negotiations towards free trade agreements.

With like-minded sugar exporting nations, through the Global Sugar Alliance, CANEGROWERS has supported the Australian government in the actions taken in the World Trade Organisation against anti-competitive practices.

Transport

CANEGROWERS represents the interests of cane growers in matters coming under the jurisdiction the National Heavy Vehicle Regulator (NHVR), Queensland Department of Transport and Main Roads (QTMR) and regional councils.

During 2016 this work produced two Gazetted notices to allow for over-width agricultural vehicles to access public roads. These notices have strict conditions which must be met but they mean individual growers do not require permits if the vehicle fits into the notice dimensions.

Water

CANEGROWERS has successfully completed the fourth year of the Rural Water Use Efficiency for Irrigation Futures Project funded by the Department of Natural Resources and Mines.

A new project aimed at reducing deep drainage in the Burdekin Groundwater Management Area and Arriga basin, providing scheduling information for irrigation decisions and pump efficiency audits across all irrigated areas, and a further dewatering bore project in the Burdekin is being negotiated.

Bridges that work for Farmers

Australian Farmers are the largest collective owners of private bridges in all of Australia. From cattle crossings to dairy truck crossings or a simple small bridge to cross a ditch with a piece of equipment, for years the Australian Farmer has found a way to make it work.

In years gone by, and in some areas even today, Australian Farmers have used recycled timber, culverts or old surplus truss style bridges to cross the gap. Ingenuity and sheer determination drove Farmers to find a way and there are as many different designs as there are Farmers who use them. Now in the more modern age we see the modular concept coming to play in so many different markets and have improved the accessibility and usefulness of the products in those markets, it was simply a matter of time before it was done for the Farming bridge market.

Now there is a move to think about the Australian Farmers needs and provide them with a bridge that will last for more then the ten or fifteen years but will instead give them consistent and reliable service for generations to come. Bridges that can be moved and relocated as needs of the farm grow and evolve. Bridges that are as good for equipment as they are for livestock and that can be easily modified to contain most livestock without the use of gates giving unfettered access to the Farmer as well as piece of mind.

The modern bridges provide Farmers with the reliability they require and the ease of a kit model assembly to install. Now the bridges that Farmers expect can be installed with equipment found on most farms so there is no need for expensive crane hire or complicated construction programs. Bridges have been demystified and are now as easy to install as following the directions on a new flat packed piece of furniture and delivered to the site in standard forty and twenty foot shipping containers.

Patented modular bridge construction systems

For more information visit us online at www.unibridge.net.au

The market has realised that Farmers have specific requirements that must be met and it has responded. Bridges are now designed to take into account the movement of livestock and come with wooden or concrete decks that animals are accustomed to walking over as opposed to steel decks that will resonate when walked across causing animals to not use them. Barriers can be removed for wide pieces of equipment like combine headers to easily cross and then reinstalled in very short periods of time. Bridges can now be moved as farms expand and grow and change with the needs of the farms growth. Now bridges are becoming as flexible as any other piece of equipment on a farm allowing for their expanded use to meet evolving needs.

When choosing a bridge the Farmer needs to consider what the bridge will be used for and if there is a future capacity that could be required. The manufacturer of the bridge is huge consideration as not all bridge companies are equal just as not all bridges are made equally. What is amazing now is that a fully engineered bridge system can be purchased for less then the cost of one designed locally as a one off design because all of the design costs for the fully engineered system are spread over the sales of many bridges as opposed to the cost of one bridge. This now means that Farmers have access to a wider range of bridge solutions then ever before that are a higher quality then they have ever been.

Modern bridges have certainly evolved over the years and now with the introduction of the more modular bridge concept we see bridges being installed into some of the most remote areas in the world. These are areas where just getting the bridge equipment to site before would have been impossible or certainly very costly. Now bridges are easier to transport in standard containers and can be assembled with no machining or welding on site reducing the overall cost of the project. Standard designs for abutments are replacing costly one off designs that add overhead to the project. A new era of bridges have evolved in the wider market place and now the benefit of the work done in these other markets is being applied to the Farm Bridge market in ways never before considered. The overall benefit to Australian Farmers is a low cost, fully engineered bridge that will last them for one hundred years. Australian Farmers are the largest collective owners of private bridges in all of Australia and now they are receiving the attention they deserve. High quality, fully engineered bridges at competitive prices that have never been lower then they are now for Farmers to take advantage of and give their farm a bridge that will last for generations.

Water Conservation

Water conservation is paramount to the successful management of water utilisation. Water storage and pumping efficiencies are the integral parts of this system.

Water Storage

Utilising tank storage will increase your clean water supply for farm usage. This type of storage eliminates evaporation and seepage ensuring the only water used is at the drinking point. Conservation of your valuable water resource starts with the most effective water storage system.

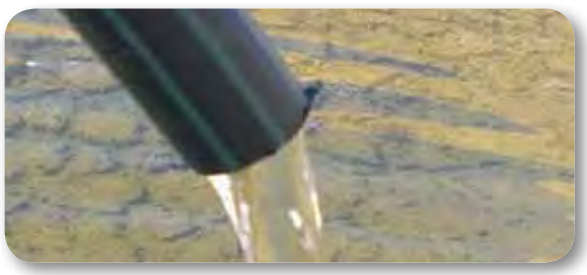
Pumping Efficiencies

Solar pumps are the most efficient and cost effective way to move water. No re-fuelling or ongoing fuel costs and minimal maintenance. The initial cost of the solar unit and installation will pay for itself within two years calculated against fuel costs and maintenance time of diesel driven units. Maximum pumping efficiency ensures you get the right amount of water required at the end point.

Purpose Designed Systems

Every situation is different, with varying requirements depending upon water availability, topography and water requirements. A purpose built system that is specifically designed for you and your needs is absolutely necessary to ensure maximum water efficiency and retention of valuable water resources.

Andrew Bambrick at Rural Pumping Solutions has spent upwards of 25 years designing purpose built systems for the agricultural sector. He specialises in ensuring that your valuable water resources are stored and moved in the most effective and efficient manner. Your individual requirements will always be met as Andrew will come out to your property to assess and discuss your requirements, view the property and design a system that suits your needs best.



In ensuring you get a purpose built system, specifically built for your individual requirements you will fulfil all your water needs with minimal maintenance and ongoing costs associated with the units. There are great savings to be made in making sure that you get an individually tailored pumping and water storage system in both your water reserves, time and also in your back pocket.

Biological Farming

Biological farming is all about farming with respect to natural processes... looking after your soils, not only the soil chemistry but also the biology and soil physical structure. Soil carbon, as organic matter, is the secret weapon of biological and organic farming.

Healthy soils function to:

- maximise sustainable plant growth and plant health
- sustain biological activity
- store and cycle water and nutrients
- decompose organic matter
- bind toxic compounds
- suppress pathogens
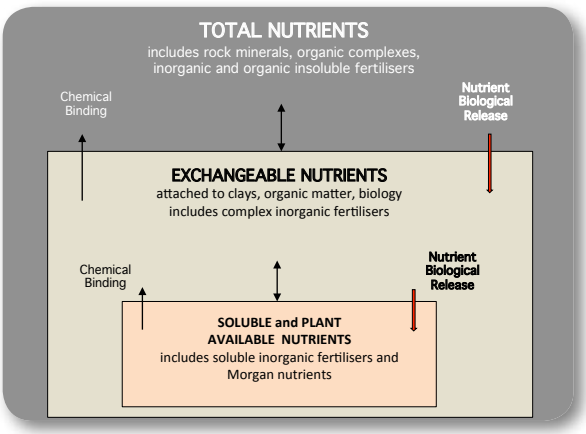
- protect water quality and enhance catchment health

Soil carbon significantly enhances all characteristics of healthy soils; soils with low organic matter content cannot achieve the above functions.

Soil Nutrients

Soils are very complex chemical and biological systems. The soluble and exchangeable nutrients typically make up less than 1% of soil mass. Soils have a large store of bound nutrients often regarded as the 'Totals' – historically these nutrients were ignored. We now know soil processes and biology can access this potentially vast nutrient source (see the diagram below).



Rock phosphate fertiliser was historically avoided, as the nutrients were considered inaccessible to plants… but now it's having widespread success in biological and carbon based farming systems. After all, what is superphosphate? Its rock phosphate boiled in sulfuric acid to artificially solubilise nutrients! However, altering these natural processes can affect soil health, impacting on soil biology, leachate loss and binding of soluble phosphorus.

Soil Management with Compost

Compost can be used to sustainably manage soils. The organisms inherent in compost build soil structure, decrease water use and re-establish natural disease controls. The soil foodweb cycles nutrients into plant available forms and bind leachable nutrients into an accessible weak organic matrix.

Additions of good quality compost can increase:

- soil organic carbon
- cation exchange capacity
- soil buffering capacity – an inherent liming value
- release and cycling of nutrients
- water holding capacity
- soil biology
- better crop yields
- binding of agro-chemicals
- carbon sequestration, reducing greenhouse emissions
- carbon offsets for trading

So what can you do…? While it's not easy, it's worth it!

- Use Soil Health Cards. They're freely available on the internet.
- Use soil analysis as a tool to reduce and target fertiliser applications.
- Use pesticides, fungicides, or both, only after careful consideration.
- Return organic matter to the soil, then manage this most valuable asset.
- Understand soils need the biota, bacteria and fungi.

Smart irrigation for your farm

According to National Geographic, 80% of the world's fresh water is used for irrigation, and 60% of that water is wasted through evaporation, leaky channels and mismanagement. Therefore successful irrigation design is essential to know how much water should be applied to crops and how frequently.

The design of the system needs to effectively deal with soil and crop types, field size, shape and water supply, the system must be capable of delivering sufficient water during times of peak crop demand.

Planning an irrigation system for a new area requires some knowledge of soil types and the soil water reservoir. The soil is a reservoir of the water used by plants. Once it has been filled to capacity by irrigation or rainfall, the reservoir gradually becomes depleted by transpiration and evaporation, or evapotranspiration (ET). When the soil moisture reaches a predetermined minimum level (refill level), below this point the plant will wilt, irrigation should be applied in order to restore the soil moisture level to field capacity.

Irrigation scheduling is a system of working out when and how much water to apply to meet the quality and yield objectives. When to irrigate depends on the time it takes for the plant to use up the ready available water in the soil. How much irrigation to apply should not exceed the amount of water which is held in the wetted rootzone.

Scheduling can be based on soil moisture sensor's which is a very effective method to estimate when to irrigate. A second method of scheduling is based on an indirect measurement of plant water use from meteorological data, the irrigation run times used by the plant since the previous irrigation event, water use is calculated from either evaporation or evaportranspiration (ET).

Successful irrigation requires not only efficient design but also proper scheduling. The latter is dependent to a large degree on the ability of the farmer to carry out irrigation events properly. Nowadays there are many control systems available ranging from irrigation management and soil moisture systems to a manually controlled operation.

There are many types of irrigation systems available ranging from Centre Pivot, Lateral Move, Boom Irrigator, Hard and Soft hose irrigators, K Line, Bike Shift, Fixed Sprinklers, Conventional Drip, Sub Surface and Flood. Prior to making a decision to purchase and irrigation system there are many factors you should consider. This is dependent upon your goals, farm size, area under irrigation, current system, pasture type, soil type, past problems, evaporation peak, water license mega litres, water supply (Dam/Bore/River/Town), water quality and energy source.

An automated irrigation system is highly effective as it can deliver water when required and on time. Having a wireless solution means you have total control from your mobile phone or computer. You can ensure water use efficiency to reduce labour costs and improve the sustainability of your farm, vineyard or orchard.

At the end of the day, whatever system you choose for your project, it is important that you get a system designed and specified to perform and operate effectively.

What to look for when selecting your borehole pump

When selecting a solar borehole pump many questions come to mind other than just, what's the price? The location of where a typical borehole pump is installed outlines a need to factor the quality, reliability, efficiency and installation flexibility as key decision drivers.

Saving a few dollars on an inferior quality product could result in many hundreds or even thousands of dollars spent lifting and re-fitting a complete pumping system when a cheaper or inferior model proves inadequate for long term use and reliability.

Selecting the right borehole pump can be a difficult and very confusing task, especially with so many options currently available. Typically speaking, the system design, component materials and the specific individual application must be considered when determining which durable and reliable system you need.

All Bore Hole systems consist of two primary components, the Wet End Pump and the Motor. Ensuring that the two halves operate in unison, providing a long and problem free life time. Some key points relating to these are outlined below:

Wet End – There have been many product improvements in recent times. There has been a switch from fixed impeller stacks to superior floating impeller stacks. These utilise wear rings and allow for easier starting in abrasive conditions, creating less wear and tear. The materials that the impellor and diffusers are comprised of must be a high quality, wear resistant material such as glass filled Noryl. With all of these key components housed in a stainless steel body you can be confident that your borehole wet end will cope with the harsh conditions that these units are required to work in. By finishing off your installation with a pre-fitted non-return valve on the discharge head you will prevent any potential water hammer and reverse flow through the pump itself.

Motor – The other half of the consideration is the choice of high quality motor. A key aspect of motor longevity is ensuring that the motor remains cool when operating, and a significant advancement with this has been through the use of encapsulated stators. The stators have been filled with resin, which helps to avoid any potential damage to the rotor or shaft during extended periods of use. Additional lubrication of the motor and thrust bearing system is provided through a water and glycol mixture housed within the unit itself. These key factors help to keep the motor in prime operating condition at all times. Another factor is a high efficiency motor to make the most from the available sunlight. The motor is a brushless DC permanent magnet type utilizing rare earth magnets for highly efficient performance and is supplied with a versatile multi-function controller.

When selecting your next Borehole pump, ask yourself…. This pump could be installed at the bottom of a 50m hole. How often do I want to be pulling it out? Quality, durability and reliability are paramount!

Supporting R&D's is essential for the future

From the beginning of time people have sought solutions to the world around them.

Interestingly, many advances have been found without that aim in sight: Fleming discovered penicillin after forgetting to wash up; velcro was designed after an engineer was frustrated by burrs in his socks; spinosad was developed when a scientist was exploring an abandoned distillery.

Not everyone has the type of enquiring mind to take small, random observations and study how it works and what application it may have. Fewer still have the resources to make that application available to the world.

In agriculture, there are now only six global companies that have the capacity for this type of research. These companies spend hundreds of millions of dollars annually on searching for new molecules and bringing them to market.

Many are the result of intensive screening programs; but there are some that develop from incidental observations such as those mentioned, which all occurred whilst on holiday!

Some may argue that we have advanced so far, we have many alternatives to every problem, the era of discovery is behind us. That is not so. Now, it is more imperative than ever for discovery to continue and to find solutions.

The world's population is predicted to tip 9 billion by 2040 (The World Bank), yet our resources are dwindling as agricultural land and water are lost to other uses, and soil fertility is declining. The future must embrace every advancement and seek more solutions to both feeding the world whilst preserving our environment.

In Australia, we're grappling with loss of agricultural land, herbicide and insecticide resistance to multiple modes of action, our harsh climate and the cost price squeeze facing many farmers. As an industry we must continue to provide new solutions to emerging issues; reliance only on old technology is leading to new problems.

Using an integrated approach, with correct use pesticides, and choosing selective pesticides, is critical and allows for the best return today, and tomorrow. However, resistance is not the only argument for choosing new chemistry for your spray tank. Toxicological standards have increased, ensuring new products are safer for you and the environment. Proprietary chemistry is produced to strict standards so there is little potential for the product not meeting its specfication and/or containing harmful excipients. New products come with educational and stewardship components, ensuring rapid transfer of knowledge.

Finally, there's the argument of discovery. Supporting companies and their brands that are actively investing in the field of discovery ensures that the capacity for research - the inquisitive mind backed by global resources - is still available for generations to come.

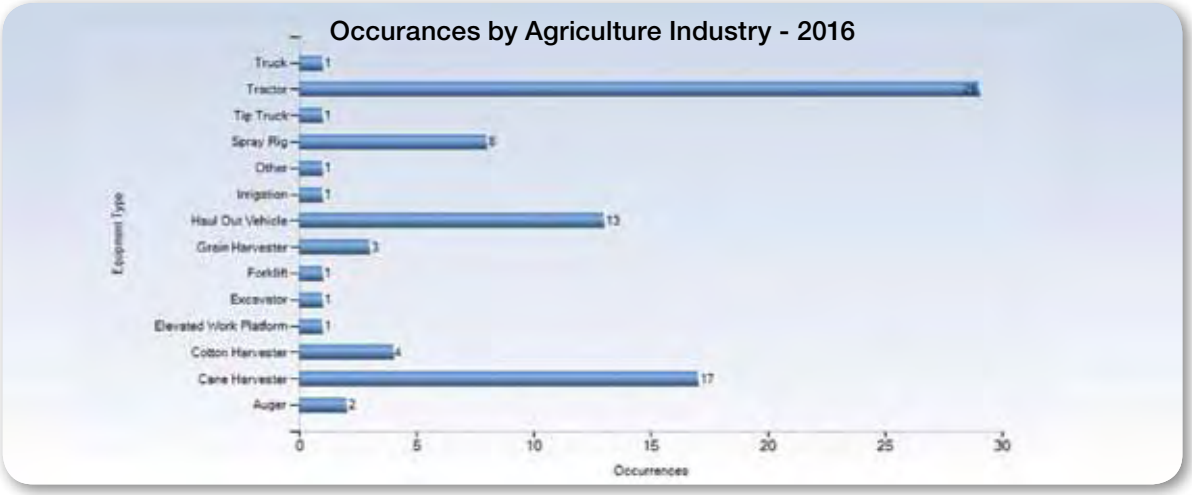
Working safely around electricity



Agricultural workers are fifty percent more likely to contact high voltage overhead powerlines in the course of their work than any other industry according to Ergon Energy.

The statistics are high and while keeping safe when working around electricity continues to be of great concern to us at Ergon, it should also be a concern for all farmers and workers in agriculture and associated industries.

Working in close proximity to powerlines, above or below the ground, has its hazards. Every year, workers die or suffer serious injuries, mostly because of poor safe work practices around electricity.

Not only could contact with powerlines cause injury or death but costs to repair the damage can be expensive.

Electrical fatalities increasing on farms

Over recent years, community electrical safety incidents in the agricultural sector have increased. In 2016 there were 83 incidents and three of the four fatalities in Queensland due to accidental contact with powerlines were in the agricultural sector.

Incidents involving tractors and cane harvesters are two of the highest risk sectors, however irrigation activities and spray rigs continue to be areas of concern.

Drought has been a factor in these irrigation incidents and they are a stark reminder that keeping electrical safety front of mind, including the “Look up and Live” message, can be a life saver.

Look Up and Live

There is never room for complacency when working near powerlines and we understand the devastating consequences that contact with overhead powerlines can have – not only on the people involved, but on their loved ones too.

So we urge you to please, take care when operating machinery around overhead powerlines, and always remember to look up and live. Most contacts occur because there has been no safety observer assigned to the activity or no avoidance strategy put in place when working near powerlines. This simple action of assigning a safety observer or marking out "no go" zones would stop 99% of these accidental contacts.

All machinery operators and other workers working near powerlines should be aware of their safety obligations under the:

- Electricity Entity Requirements: Working Near Overhead and Underground Electric Lines for anyone who may be contemplating working or operating plant near any Electricity Entity overhead or underground electric lines. This publication can be found at www.ergon.com.au/lookupandlive; and
- Electrical Safety Regulation 2013 and adopt safe work practices in accordance with the Electrical safety code of practice 2010 – Working near overhead and underground electric lines. Copies of these publications can be obtained from the Queensland Government electrical safety website www.justice.qld.gov.au/fair-and-safe-work/electrical-safety

Crane contacts overhead powerlines.

Farm safety and safe work habits

Please take the time to read this valuable information about some of the potential dangers of powerlines for operators of machinery including excavators, tractors, crop sprayers, harvesters, irrigators or ladders.

Before you start work

- Talk to the person in control of the property about any work areas which may be hazardous.
- Know the location of overhead and underground powerlines, poles and stays, and their proximity to your work.
- Be aware of electrical safety legislation on powerlines. Obtain a code of practice and ensure workers are familiar with the relevant sections.
- Complete a hazard assessment for each work site including paddocks, sidings, and the piece of machinery to be used.
- Install visual markers where electrical hazards are identified prior to commencing work.
- Monitor weather conditions as powerlines can sway in winds, sag in heat and are difficult to see at dawn and dusk.
- Be aware of reduced powerline heights resulting from damage often indicated by uneven powerlines, excessive sag, or slack stays.
- Ensure operators know machinery heights in stowed and working positions.
- Monitor machinery to ensure required powerline exclusion zone clearances are maintained.
- Ensure farm workers know the emergency procedures and contacts.
- Ensure aerial applicators are aware of all powerlines on the property
- Stay well clear of damaged powerlines and report them immediately on 13 22 96.

Exclusion zone distances

Workers and their equipment should not approach overhead powerlines any closer than depicted in the diagram below. Although these are the minimum exclusion zone clearances required, you can reduce the likelihood of mistakes by operating machinery well clear of powerlines. Always assign a safety observer to ensure you do not come within an unsafe distance of powerlines.

Safety on your property

If you're a quad bike rider, make the effort to be a ride ready rider. There have been 33 quad bike deaths in Queensland in the last five years, three-quarters of them male were and around one in six were under 15 years old.

Across Australia almost 8000 people were admitted to hospital after something just didn't go to plan on a quad bike.[i]

Being 'ride ready' means having the right experience and knowledge to anticipate what can go wrong – whether it's a hidden rock or a log in long grass, a gully washed-out from a recent storm or animals behaving unexpectedly. You might only need to slow down, carry a lighter load, be wary of slopes and rough terrain or re-think the task being done.

Here's some of our safety tips to help you become ride ready:

Select the right vehicle for the job

Quad bikes are useful, but they are not always the best first choice. Sometimes there will be a better option. A side-by-side vehicle or a ute is better if you need to carry loads or passengers, or if you're mustering consider using a horse or motorbike instead.

Helmets are a must:

Being prepared for the unexpected makes sense. Helmets are the best protection you can have from a serious head injury, yet in one-third of incidents the rider was not wearing one.

Rollovers can be prevented:

Half of all incidents involve a quad bike rollover. Quad bikes have a high centre of gravity, which makes them more prone to rollovers. You can help manage rollovers by improving your rider skills through formal training and knowing the terrain where you're riding.

Never let kids ride adult bikes:

We encourage parents and supervisors to be aware of the dangers of kids riding on adult bikes. Kids just don't have the physical strength and weight to properly control a 350kg adult quad bike. Kids also shouldn't double on quad bikes ridden by adults – weight distribution plays an important part in safe riding.

That's why we always wear helmets.

Ride ready.

HELMET TERRAIN DON'T OVERLOAD TRAINING

Queensland Government

Authorised by the Queensland Government, George St, Brisbane.

There have been too many incidents where kids have come off second best. Please never let kids under 16 ride an adult bike. Instead they should only use a quad bike suitable for their size and which they can properly handle. They might be able to ride well in most stable conditions, but are they ride ready for the unexpected?

The rules on roads have changed:

If you need to ride on or cross public roads then you will need to conditionally register your quad bike for road use. You will also need to wear an approved helmet and not carry any child under eight as a passenger on a quad bike or side-by-side vehicle. Failure to do so can lead to heavy fines and loss of demerit points. Visit qld.gov.au/transport/ to find out more.

We want everyone to be ride ready. Go ahead, take the challenge at qld.gov.au/rideready.

Safety in the agriculture industry

Work health and safety is critical for every business. Workers should be able to go home safely at the end of each day, but statistics consistently show a much sadder story. While only three per cent of Queenslanders work on farms and rural properties, they account for about 30 per cent of deaths. Most of these fatalities could have been avoided if better safety procedures had been taken. Stop and think about the task you or your workers are about to do and check if there's a safer way.

We're not just about compliance. The safety, health and wellbeing of employers and workers in the agriculture industry is a priority.

We work closely with industry associations to introduce best practice management programs such as Grazing BMP to improve safety practices, productivity and the safety culture at your business.

Together with other government agencies we help ensure vulnerable workers, such as backpackers, have the same levels of safety and well-being. Our programs also help businesses manage risk, find solutions to prevent injury and support rehabilitation and return to work.

There's more information in our Serious about farm safety guide available at worksafe.qld.gov.au.

We recognise safety

Growers and graziers are always finding innovative ways to improve safety. We want to recognise your achievements through our Safe Work and Return to Work Awards. You can enter each year in May to June and win up to $2000 per category.

Safety is important for kids too. Primary school kids can put their artistic talents to good use and enter a drawing about farm safety to our Farm safety calendar competition. Each year, twelve winners are featured in the following year's calendar.

A simple guide to working safely near overhead powerlines on your farm

Working near powerlines can be fatal. Touching them or straying into the exclusion zone around them can result in a serious electric shock.

Between 2004 and 2013, farmers represented four out of six work related electrocutions due to contact with overhead powerlines, with three of these fatalities involving crop spraying booms/pipes[1].

In 2015-16 there were 70 incidents where agricultural equipment including tractors, cane harvesters, slashers, spray rigs and irrigation equipment came into contact with overhead powerlines, with a seasonal peak in incidents when crops such as cane and grain are harvested.[2]

The risks

Sometimes overhead powerlines are difficult to see in the landscape even on a bright sunny day, and more so in low light, in rain, cloudy weather, or at dawn or dusk.

They can also sag between poles as much as four metres below the cross-arms supporting them, and sway in the wind, so what appears to be a safe working distance may later expose you, your family, workers or property to serious risks.

Electrical incidents on farms often involve contact between machinery or irrigation pipes and overhead powerlines, a lack of electrical equipment maintenance, and unauthorised electrical handy-work. Apart from death and injury, electrical incidents can also cause costly property damage.

[1] p.29, Electrical Injuries in Queensland: Snapshot Report, Kirsten Vallmuur, May 2016, The Centre for Accident Research and Road Safety – Queensland, QUT.

[2] Ergon Energy's 2015-2016 damage report

Tips to improve electrical safety

If you have powerlines on or near your property, determine the height and reach of all machinery and plant that is used near them, then work out if any machinery part has a chance of coming too close to the powerlines. Plant and machinery such as irrigation pipes, grain augers, elevators, grain silos, cranes and excavators all have the potential to contact powerlines.

Here is a guide to working near overhead powerlines on your farm, to ensure your safety, as well as your family, friends and workers.

1. Develop a safe system of work before you start

- Identify overhead and underground powerlines by consulting maps and/or talking to the property owner and electrical entity.
- Conduct a site specific risk assessment – think about the type of plant and equipment/tools used, nature and size of loads being moved, site and weather conditions, type of work being done, and set-up and pack-up procedures.
- Put risk controls in place – the most effective way of controlling the risk is to de-energise the line for the duration of work where there is a risk of contact.
- Before work begins, ensure vegetation isn't hiding powerlines from view.

2. Keep your workers and contractors informed about electrical safety

- Induct and train your workers and contractors in safe work procedures, emergency procedures, and exclusion zones (Figure 1).
- Carefully plan the tasks to be completed near powerlines and work away from them whenever possible, not underneath them.
- Show your workers the safe distance from an exclusion zone by marking it on the ground.
- Ensure people are aware that powerlines sag or sway in hot or windy weather.
- Harvesters, elevated work platforms, irrigation pipes, grain augers, elevators, mobile grain silos, cranes, tippers and excavators have the potential to enter exclusion zones. Ensure your operators know the height and reach of machinery or hand held items to be used.

3. Avoid going into exclusion zones

- Make powerlines and poles visible. Ask your electrical entity for permission to paint power poles and/or have them install markers or flags on the powerlines.
- Lower toppers, harvesters and elevators when moving equipment to avoid contact with powerlines.
- Use a safety observer to make sure you stay well clear of exclusion zones.
- Where possible, use insulated or non-conductive tools and equipment.
- Follow the safety advice given by your electrical entity.

Never perform your own electrical work

People who perform unlicensed and do-it-yourself electrical work risk electric shock to themselves and others, with potentially deadly consequences. The electrical installation or equipment affected may be unwittingly left in an unsafe state. The danger may not be immediately apparent, often only becoming evident in a fault situation, or it may develop over time.

Major property damage from an electrical fire is also a real risk that can impose considerable financial, emotional and social costs, especially if it was the result of illegal electrical work, which may lead to an insurer refusing a claim.

Performing your own electrical work is illegal and may invalidate your insurance. Installing or repairing electrical equipment or cables must only be done by a licensed electrician. Even when you think you know what you are doing, never attempt to do your own electrical work – it's dangerous, illegal and can be fatal.

What is LPG? Liquefied Petroleum Gas - Propane

LPG – Liquefied Petroleum Gas – describes flammable hydrocarbon gases including propane, butane and mixtures of these gases.

LPG, liquefied through pressurisation, comes from natural gas processing and oil refining.

LPG is used as heating, cooking and auto fuel.

In different countries, what is supplied can be propane, butane or propane-butane blends.

In 7 LPG (Propane) Fast Facts

1. LPG (or LP Gas) is the acronym for Liquefied Petroleum Gas or Liquid Petroleum Gas.
2. LPG is a group of flammable hydrocarbon gases that are liquefied through pressurisation and commonly used as fuel.
3. LPG comes from natural gas processing and petroleum refining.
4. There are a number of gases that fall under the "LPG" label, including propane, butane (n-butane) and isobutane (i-butane), as well as mixtures of these gases.
5. LPG gases can all be compressed into liquid at relatively low pressures.
6. LPG is frequently used for fuel in heating, cooking, hot water and vehicles, as well as for refrigerants, aerosol propellants and petrochemical feedstock.
7. LPG is generally stored, as a liquid, in steel vessels ranging from small BBQ gas bottles to larger gas cylinders and LPG storage tanks.

Australia, LPG is just propane. Propane is LPG but not all LPG is propane.

LPG in Crop, Livestock & Poultry Applications

LPG gas has numerous applications in agriculture including heating for poultry, livestock, greenhouses and more. LPG gas can be delivered no matter where you are in Australia.

Typical Agricultural Applications

Some typical applications include:

- Constant temperature control for brooders.
- Hot water for sanitation and other uses
- Space heating for poultry sheds, greenhouses and nurseries
- Cost effective power generators
- Forklift fuel
- Flame weeding and pest control without chemical
- Handling and processing of meat and other food products
- CO_2 generation for plant growth enhancement.
- Drying produce such as cotton, grains, milk products, nuts & tobacco
- As a diesel fuel substitute, in machinery, to reduce costs and emissions

LPG Gas for Diesel Substitution

Partial substitution, with LPG, saves money and lowers emissions with diesel engines in fixed installations and vehicles.

Diesel Substitution

- Suitable for fixed diesel installations and vehicles
- The rate of substitution is typically 30-35% and depends on engine size and application
- A diesel substitution kit is fitted to the engine without the need to make any modifications
- The kit can be easily removed and installed on another engine
- Diesel Substitution Control Units ensure the optimum substitution rate
- Engine monitoring and data logging systems continuously check engine performance and fuel consumption.

Venomous Snakes of Australia

Taipans

Taipans are amongst the most feared and deadly snakes in the world, combining extremely potent and copious amounts of venom, long fangs and an accurate strike! There are 2 species of Taipans in Australia, the Coastal Taipan, found along the high rainfall Eastern coast and all through Cape York Peninsula; and the Inland Taipan, found along the drainage system for the Lake Eyre Basin. Both species, in their adult lives, feed almost entirely on rats. The venoms of both are highly toxic - the Inland Taipan venom is probably the most toxic of any snake in the world being 50 times more deadly than the Thai Cobra. The venoms are rich in neurotoxins, have a powerful clotting agent and possess potent muscle destroying components.

Coastal Taipan Inland Taipan

Tiger Snake

Species include Common (Eastern) Tiger snake and Black Tiger snake. Tiger snakes are found in the wetter parts of eastern Australia, including Tasmania, most of Victoria, much of NSW, south eastern Queensland and the south-west of Western Australia. Their colour is highly variable. Tiger snakes have mainly a darker ground colour with lighter irregular cross bands but occasionally un-banded and even black specimens occur. They are highly venomous - bites from this species can cause a number of symptoms, which include paralysis, clotting difficulties and muscle weakness. To the untrained person, they can be easily confused with Brown snakes, Rough Scaled snakes, or even some harmless snakes like the Fresh Water snake and Carpet Pythons.

Brown snakes

There are 4 species of Brown snakes - the Common Brown snake, Western Brown snake, Ingram's Brown snake and the Speckled Brown snake. The Common Brown snake is responsible for most snakebites, with the others contributing occasionally to the tally. All of them use constriction as a method of prey restraint. All are highly dangerous although the venom yields from Speckled Brown snakes tend to be low.

Although the venom from Ingram's Brown snake and Speckled Brown snake haven't been studied, they are assumed to be similar to the other two. The venom contains potent neurotoxins and a powerful clotting agent. About 70% of all bites & deaths to humans and animals in Australia are caused by the Brown snake.

Common Brown Snake

Western Brown Snake

Speckled Brown Snake

Ingrams Brown Snake

Black snakes

There are 4 main types of Black snakes - they are the King Brown snake or Mulga snake, which is not a Brown snake as the name implies but a Black snake. The other 3 are the Spotted Black or Blue-Bellied snake, the Collett's snake and the Red-Bellied Black snake. The venoms of all Black snakes have similarities but the Red-Bellied Black snake has a clotting agent when the others are anticoagulant. All have muscle destroying properties and are weakly neurotoxic.

Black snake anti-venom can be used on all of them however Tiger snake anti-venom is used on some preferentially because it is cheaper.

Red-Bellied Black Snake

Collett's Snake

King Brown or Mulga Snake

Spotted Black or Blue Snake

IMPORTANT INFORMATION

Snake bite to limbs

- Rest the casualty
- Do not panic
- Apply direct pressure over the bitten area
- Apply a firm broad bandage over the bite area first, then bandage down the limb and continue to bandage up the full length of the limb. The bandage should be as tight as you would apply to a sprained ankle.
- Immobilise the limb with a splint
- CALL FOR MEDICAL AID!

Remember

- Do not wash venom off the skin
- Do not cut the bitten area
- Do not try to suck venom out of wound
- Do not elevate the limb
- Do not remove the bandage
- Do not walk or run - get help to you
- In Australia we are fortunate to have a Venom Detection Kit made by CSL Ltd, which can advise which anti-venom to use.

Is it fit to load?

Animal welfare legislation & livestock transport

The Australian Animal Welfare Standards for the Land Transport of Livestock (the Standards) define specific requirements in relation to livestock transport in Australia. The Standards are enforceable. It is an offence to load and transport an animal in a way that causes, or is likely to cause, it unnecessary harm.

These Standards replace the individual state/territory livestock transport provisions of the Australian model codes of practice for the welfare of animals, so there are now the same rules nationwide for livestock transport.

This Is it fit to load guide will help producers, agents, buyers, transporters meet their legal obligations under the new Standards.

Preparing livestock for transport

Preparing livestock for transport correctly is a vital element of any journey. Well-prepared stock travel better, are less stressed and associated animal welfare issues are avoided.

Steps for preparing livestock for transport:

- plan the journey including rest stops and inspections
- know who to contact in case of an emergency
- make sure the facilities including yards, races, loading ramps and vehicles are well constructed and will not injure livestock
- handle livestock quietly and with minimum force – stress is cumulative
- segregate animals appropriately (e.g. horned animals, mothers with young, etc.)
- rest recently mustered livestock prior to loading

It is the responsibility of the person in charge to ensure that animals are prepared correctly and will cope well with the entire journey.

Preparing livestock for transport - feed & water

Maximum time off water. The Standards determine the maximum period of time that each species can be held off water during transport. See the table overleaf for more information. This period includes mustering and any time off water in yards, as well as the journey itself. But, these are maximum limits - certain classes of animals, such as pregnant or young animals, or conditions such as hot dry weather could mean animals need even more regular access to water.

Journey log. Transporters, drivers and agents should always seek information about how long animals have been off feed and water before loading. If it is likely that the journey will take more than 24 hours, then the date and time when animals last had access to water and when they were last inspected must be recorded by the person in charge. Written information about who to contact in an emergency must also be provided.

Feed and water during curfews. Dry feed such as hay but not green feed can be offered prior to loading even if water has been withheld. While food and/or water is on offer, make sure that there is enough space for every animal to access it, as shy feeders become an issue when space is limited. Consider giving electrolytes to animals during the preparation period as it may help prevent physical stress during a long journey.

Are you at risk of theft?

It's easy to become complacent when it comes to farm security. Sometimes it's just more convenient to leave the ute keys in the ignition when it's parked in the shed. How often do you lock the front door when you're off down the paddock?

Theft from farms is actually a big problem. According to a 2015 University of England study, the biggest criminal activities affecting farmers are trespassing and illegal hunting or fishing, stock theft, theft of tolls or equipment, fuel theft and illegal rubbish dumping. Here are some tips to help keep your property safe:

No one home?

If no one lives on your property, or if you're away for the day or away on holidays, arrange for someone to regularly check on it. Even if this might not stop opportunistic theft, it does mean you're able to get the police involved at the earliest possible time in hope they can catch those responsible.

Keep an inventory

Know what you own. Keep a complete list of all your tools, machinery and equipment in a safe place. Write down serial numbers and take photographs. It'll help police track down the items and help with your insurance claim if the items can't be returned.

Insure with WFI and you'll deal directly with an insurance specialist who will take the time to understand your insurance needs. For insurance with a personal touch, call your local WFI area manager.

Call 1300 934 934 or visit wfi.com.au

Good people to know.

wfi

According to a University of New England survey of more than 3,000 farmers in 2015:

59%

of farmers surveyed had dealt with trespassing and illegal hunting or fishing at some point during the past 12 years

had experienced stock theft

26%

of farmers had tools and equipment stolen

had fuel stolen

12%

had experienced machinery theft.

Be insured

This seems obvious, but it's all too easy to be underinsured – and you might not notice until it's too late. Review your insurance coverage to make sure you have enough and that everything is included on your policy.

Keep your keys safe

Don't leave keys in vehicles, no matter how convenient it might seem. Install a secure key cabinet in a suitable location and keep it locked.

Lock up your fuel

Fuel is an expensive resource and it's among the top items stolen from farms. Keep your fuel under lock and key in a location well away from a public road and where you can monitor it.

Lock up your valuables

Tools, machinery and larger pieces of equipment like air compressors, pumps and generators are all prime targets for theft. Include them on your inventory. And, most importantly, lock your shed and toolboxes where you keep these items.

Make items traceable

Engrave items so they are easily identified and hard to sell on. Or install GPS trackers on them so they can be located if they are stolen.

Farm Succession Planning

Farming families risk creating problems and expense or reducing their options by leaving succession planning too late. Sometimes this can result in the farming property being sold or broken up. Sometimes it's the family that breaks up.

Estate planning involving all family members and taking into account individual expectations can often prevent problems, such as breakdowns in family relationships and trust, emerging later on.

Instead of a planned handover of management, control and ownership of the farm over time, families often wait for a major life event before considering farm succession and passing on the enterprise to the next generation.

These events can be the older generation wanting to retire, a son or daughter returning home to work on the farm, a new marriage or death in the family, or a housing issue. Ideal planning occurs when the family makes an informed decision before that happens in conjunction with all interested parties when decisions can be made by choice and not necessity.

Often both generations do not negotiate their wishes, their expectations, remuneration, holidays, housing issues, what they stand to inherit and what financial support is needed for off farm family members and parents in retirement.

It is very traumatic for the farm family that has not planned for succession when a situation dawns on them and they realise the farm needs to be sold.

Good succession planning should encompass early planning around a profitable business with off farm investment to provide for the older generation's retirement and the needs of off farm siblings. It should begin by managing the expectation of farm family members.

Succession Planning:

Understanding families is the key to effective estate planning:

Having a clear understanding of your family at the outset of the planning process helps ensure that the plan suits the particular needs of your individual families.

The best source of information about families comes from you, who has the clearest knowledge of family strengths and weaknesses and can guide in the preparation of estate plans that fit your circumstances.

The challenge is getting family members to accept decisions that need to be made:

Succession (Estate) planning involves arranging a family's assets and circumstances to ensure that you derive from those assets, maximum use and enjoyment at a minimum cost in tax and duties and to put in place a plan ensuring that the farming assets are passed to the next generation at the same time ensuring your financial security in retirement and providing bequests for "off farm" children.

The planning process:

The process require a review of your circumstances and farm structure and our formulating a plan and recommendations which include:

- consideration of transfer/gift of assets to children;
- introduction of children into the farm business;
- your retirement, if applicable;
- asset protection;
- changes to the farming structure;
- effective wills;

Your affairs are unique and require individual attention. Succession planning requires an initial comprehensive understanding of your financial and personal needs, asset holdings, your needs and plans and those of your children, especially those actively involved with the property.

Asset Protection:

Generally the main concern is the protection of the family assets. This is because:-

- we want to ensure that our personal and business assets are protected for future generations;
- we want to ensure that our assets are protected from attack from creditors, bankruptcy etc.
- we want to ensure that the assets that pass to our children are protected from creditors, bankruptcy, marriage breakdown, etc.
- we need to ensure the security of our cash flow and financial security in retirement;
- the society we live in is increasingly at risk from litigation.

Asset protection is a real concern and an integral part of a succession plan.

Family Protection:

Another major concern is to avoid family dispute and breakdown of family relationships. Your succession plan needs to consider each family member and consideration given to their circumstances. In most situations it is not possible, and sometimes not fair, to treat all children equally. Our experience is that children are more likely to understand if consulted and become involved in the planning process.

A succession plan needs to identify any potential problems and make suggestions and recommendations to try and avoid conflict in the future.

Other Topics considered in Succession Planning:

In considering Succession Planning, there are other issues that may be relevant to your circumstances and questions.

These other issues you may wish to address include:-

- Transfer of assets to children by gift or otherwise during your lifetime;
- Existing business / farm structures and recommended changes;
- Options and Buy / Sell Agreements;
- Retirement;
- Pre-nuptial and de-facto Agreements;
- Guardians for children;
- Enduring Powers of Attorney;
- Advance Health Directives;
- Insurance / Superannuation;
- Family challenges to your Will and Estate;
- Retention of assets in the family.

Accounting and Financial Advice:

Your solicitor's advices deal with legal issues only. Taxation, Superannuation and Income Generation issues are matters for the expertise of your Accountant and Financial Advisor and you should consult them in regard to those matters. A sound succession plan can only be achieved by combining your own family's goals with good legal and financial advice.

Educating the next generation of agriculture leaders requires teamwork

Rockhampton Grammar School students receive hands-on learning at the school farm.

Educators and industry representatives are collaborating in Central Queensland to ensure students from across the state have the best opportunities to pursue careers in the rural industry.

In a unique alliance among school, industry, universities, other education providers and major agriculture businesses, students are undertaking a hands-on Certificate III in Agriculture designed specifically for local conditions.

The aim of the programme is to graduate career-ready young men and women who want to build their knowledge and establish themselves as Australian agriculture leaders.

A key characteristic of the school-based programme is that its courses were developed by farming families and industry partners, as well as educators.

Students undertaking the Certificate III study, as a cohort, at the former CSIRO facility, Belmont Station at Etna Creek near Rockhampton. The property, currently home to a commercial cattle herd, is also a research hub for university graduate students. High school students, therefore, work closely with scientists on research projects.

Unlike other programmes, where students undertake individual traineeships and manage the variability of employer expectations, this Certificate III allows students to develop best practice skills in an industry environment, encouraging practical application and complex problem solving in real-world scenarios rather than completion of work in isolated competencies. It is based upon the three components: inquiry-based, student-centred learning; specialised agricultural experiences; and personal capacity development.

Students enrolled in 16 courses learn how to operate machinery, identify and draft livestock, control weeds, maintain equipment, implement sustainable work practices and more.

The programme, introduced in 2015, is conducted at The Rockhampton Grammar School (RGS) and it complements the school's overall Agriculture programme, which exposes 1400 students from Prep to Year 12 to food and fibre production and technology.

Students study animal sciences, plant sciences and agri-business as well as sustainable resource management, undertaking units of study based upon production horticulture, egg and layer production, paddock to plate meat production, and technology in modern agriculture.

Boys and girls not only develop a broad understanding of agriculture as an economic force, but also practice scientific research methodologies in an agricultural context.

The School (Queensland's largest boarding school) is located in Australia's beef capital, Rockhampton, and in proximity to some of Australia's most productive agricultural land. It is uniquely positioned to provide opportunities to boys and girls to become involved and excel in agriculture.

RGS is currently developing articulations and agreements with other education providers and industry members to enhance study options for students.

Bonsmara are a tropically adapted bos Taurus breed. Performance recording is the cornerstone of their development. They are the dominant breed in South Africa, where some 60,000 registered females are currently being performance recorded with the commercial and seedstock herds, adding to around 4 million head.

The genetics are a combination of African and British, forming a very productive breed in their own right, but also offer Australian cattlemen an attractive option as terminal sires with Brahman and Brahman Euro breeders Research continues to show that on average bos taurus meat is more consumer acceptable than bos indicus meat.

This and the desire to capture hybrid vigour benefits opens up a potential market for tropical bos taurus breeds especially as a cross with the Euro/ Brahman which are very popular at present. This is one of the opportunities for Bonsmara – it can meet the requirements of commercial cattlemen.

The Brahman's improved efficiency of production over breeds is closely linked to its unique digestive system attributes:

- The ability to recycle nutrients through the blood stream and saliva promotes digestion
- Reduced water intake means reduced urination resulting in less nitrogen loss and higher blood nitrogen levels
- Maintenance of higher intake levels of low quality feed
- Low maintenance requirement
- Slower rate of protein turnover enables muscle and body tissue development to continue on low feed intake
- Brahmans remain productive longer
- Brahmans sulphur demand for hair growth means more available for amino acids associated with growth and production
- Lower rumen liquid volume and higher rumen bacterial fat results in higher levels of energy rich compounds in the blood stream.

Combining the best traits of both British and tropical breeds, the Droughtmaster was developed specifically for the Australian environment by practical, commercial cattlemen last century.

The Droughtmaster breed evolved after many years of crossbreeding & meticulous selection for:

- fertility
- calving ease
- resistance to blight & eye cancer
- bloat resistance
- docility
- virility
- meat quality
- maternal instincts
- parasite resistance
- environmental adaptation
- heat tolerance

Those innovative commercial cattlemen created a breed with the best of both worlds – a breed which could survive and thrive in harsh environments, while consistently producing progeny with high yielding carcasses of quality beef.

The Australian Hereford is the true 'all-rounder' with the ability to perform in a variety of environments and be accepted into a range of domestic and export markets.

Cow and calf producers, re-stockers, grass finishers, backgrounders, lot feeders and processors all rely on Hereford consistency & reliability to maximise production & profitability.

More than 1500 Herefords Australia Members produce a large range of registered, performance recorded herds including horned and polled bulls.

Herefords produce top eating quality beef over a wide range of environments and are especially suited for the growing EU market that requires pasture finished or short-fed cattle. Fertility, high growth rates, docility and strong market acceptance have resulted in the Hereford being the chosen breed for a large numbers of Australian beef producers.

Herefords and Hereford cross cattle can be found from arid central Australia to the snow covered high country. In all environments, the famed Hereford 'doing ability' means they produce and survive in favourable and unfavourable seasons.

History;

Developed on the Caribbean Island of St Croix in the early 1900's by crossing N'dama cattle, from, Senegal with British Red Polls in order to produce a Tropically Adapted Bos Taurus able to cope with the harsh environment of the island.

The first genetics were imported into Australia in mid 1990's by the Australian Agricultural Co. They continue to use Senepol genetics in their composite programme for northern Australia.

Breed Characteristics;

Senepols are believed to be the only breed of cattle, presently in Australia, that carry the "slick" coat gene which is associated with their heat tolerance and insect resistance. USDA research indicates that Senepols have a greater immune response when compared with other beef breeds mainly due to the N'dama influence.

Senepols are similar to Angus in calving and light birth weight. The huge advantage they offer is tremendous calf vigour with calves standing and sucking quickly after birth.

They are naturally polled, honey to red in colour with exceptionally good temperament.

Being unrelated to 98% of the Australian cattle population they offer a high degree of hybrid vigour when crossed with other breeds. They also tend to "even up" different lines of crossbred cattle.

The Dorper is a fast growing meat producing sheep that is particularly known for its ability to adapt and survive in a variety of climatic and grazing conditions.

The Dorper was originally bred for the more arid regions of South Africa in the 1930s. Initially imported into Australia in the mid 1990s, its suitability to most climate conditions has seen the Dorper develop into one of the largest meat sheep breeds in Australia today.

Characteristics of the Dorper include:

- Adaptability to and hardiness for a variety of climatic and grazing conditions
- High fertility and reproduction rates
- High growth rates with the ability to achieve maximum growth from little feed
- Good muscling and low fat scores - excellent for the domestic and export trade
- Thick quality skin for protection in harsh climate conditions
- Shedding of wool and hair according to seasonal conditions
- Excellent mothering qualities and milk production
- Low maintenance - minimal shearing required if any, flystrike resistant, no mulesing required at all

The Dorper and White Dorper are both white bodied sheep, but differ in the colouring of the head. The Dorper has short dullish-black hair whilst White Dorpers have dull white coloured hair. Despite this difference, the term "Dorper" is often used to describe both breed types.
